NOTA		USO DA DEGRÊM

Some people seem to have been born with an unfailling sense of direction. Even when lost in the woods, they find their way home as surely as an animal picks up the scent of its prey. The secret is probably that they never feel lost. Others, myself included, can manage to get lost even in a department store.

When I was in the army, there was nothing I disliked more than the course in map reading, for the simple reason that I always feel lost—even with a map in my hand. For weeks I had been lying awake at night thinking of the practical test I would have to face at the end of the course. Finally, the dreaded day arrived. It was to be my responsibility to lead a small squad of soldiers back to camp from the middle of nowhere. We were driven out in a closed truck and left in a cow pasture with instructions to get back to camp as quickly as possible.

Knowing about my problem as they did, the soldiers smiled as they saw me looking at the map and they made all sorts of "helpful" suggestions. I folded the map up, put it in my pocket, and announced that we would head east. After walking through cornfields for over an hour, we came to a wide stream. I again looked at the map. It seemed to be covered with masses of thin blue lines, but which particular line was this stream? In frustration, we sat down to rest in the shade and I felt like throwing the map into the water. About fifteen minutes later, a boat came along and I asked the owner of the boat if he could give us a lift to the nearest town. I pretended that we had been out for a hike and somehow gotten lost. The owner of the boat invited us aboard and I felt very foolish when he told me that he had helped hundreds of soldiers pass their map-reading test! Not long afterwards, we got off the boat and, following the boat owner's instructions, took a bus into town. When we got back to camp, my company commander congratulated me on having led the men back so quickly!

Glossary: squad (r) = small group of soldiers working or being trained together.
 fold (v) = bend or turn something so that one part of it lies on another.
 stream (n) = small river.
 dreaded (adj) = feared.
 to head (v) = to move towards.
